

YOU'RE AS BIG AS A HOUSE AND YOU CAN'T BEAR TO LEAVE THE HOUSE.

Maybe you've been so focused on getting your ducks in a row (and we don't mean quack, quack) before going on maternity leave that you've run out of time. Or maybe you're just plain superstitious and couldn't bring yourself to make a single purchase for your soon-to-be-born child. Whatever. You've got 37 onesies from your baby shower but no crib, no changing table, or rocker. Worst of all, you have to pee every 20 minutes and a trip to a sprawling baby emporium might put you over the edge. Don't worry, Cookie has scoured the market to find online retailers that will ship nursery essentials (and some fun and fuzzy extras) directly to you in no time flat. Just choose your style—modern, classic, eclectic—and have your credit card handy. All you have to do is point and click. Someone else can open the boxes when they arrive on your doorstep.

The baby is due in three weeks and the nursery is empty. Take a deep breath. Getting a room delivered is

(tip)

If you're going for a modern look, be sure not to overdo it with too much plastic or white. Warm wood accents, such as the rocking chair shown here and the wood trim on the crib, offset stark walls and sleek storage units. A dose of Danish modern, Japanese or Shaker furniture designs provides a bit of the organic and transitions nicely between modern and traditional.

(tip)

You can use paper lanterns, shown here, as decoration by stringing them up with fishing wire or thread and tying them to cup hooks that screw into the ceiling. To wire them as lamps, run an electrical cord with socket through two hooks—the first one on the ceiling directly above the lantern, and the second, close enough to the wall so that the cord lies flush.
